Training Methodology

This course uses various adult learning techniques to aid full understanding and comprehension. Participants will watch video examples based on positive and negative negotiation and influencing styles and their consequences.

They will also use group activities and learn tools and techniques to develop an action plan for business processes and projects. They will present the benefits and accurate statistics to potential stakeholders to gain buy-in.

Role-playing activities will also use real-world scenarios to improve participants' natural negotiation and relationship-building techniques and help them handle objections and manage challenging conversations.

Summary

For many businesses, stakeholders are essential to profit-making and progress. They provide valuable ideas and insight, increased innovation, the ability to compare with competitors and other businesses in the field, and, most importantly, the finances to grow a business without encountering financial difficulties.

Developing a stable and mutually beneficial relationship with the right stakeholders can be difficult. Developing a strong connection with people who understand your mission and company aims is essential. To maintain their interest, you will need to utilise practical negotiation skills and engage your stakeholders in all areas of your organisation.

Sometimes, stakeholder relationships can become rocky, and it's also important to keep them on the side, remove the pressure from your employees, and maintain stability by offering innovative solutions to questions and problems.

It's also your responsibility within the business to develop processes and skills to consider both external and internal stakeholders, including contractors, employees, clients, shareholders, and consultants, increase opportunities, and overcome challenges to ensure that the business is propelled forward and increasing in profitability.
