Summary

Event coordination is vital for many successful organisations as it allows them to directly engage with their clients and increase their rapport and reputation in an exciting way that feels rewarding to the client. For these events to be successful, marketing event officers are crucial to this process.

Marketing event officers are professionals responsible for planning, promoting, and managing the event to ensure its success. Those in this role must obtain a variety of skills, including communication, marketing, and design. These skills will contribute to their ability to research the target audience, plan and design the venue to be appealing, and ensure these all fit within their feasibility study.

Not only is planning the event important, but also managing the event as it is active. Communicating with guests and managing the different features and functions will ensure maximum productivity. Engaging with guests will enable the event officer and organisation to build a stronger relationship with them, which can lead to further exposure or business opportunities.
